

Ekaterina Shulman in her speech spoke about the possible future that awaits us in her opinion.

She cited statistics and it turned out that in Russia people perceive the new not as an opportunity but as a threat.

This is due to the fact that we all cling to the golden age.

The topic of increasing the social need of people was touched upon, since now it has become very easy to get to know each other and communicate.

Now, if a person has little money, then he is less happy than the one who earns average, but a further increase in money does not lead to an increase in happiness.

She also spoke about the guaranteed civil income thanks to which people will have a higher standard of living despite the fact that people will have less money.

True, there is a chance that people will start spending this money on alcohol and drugs, but according to her, computer games will come to the rescue.

Democracy will move to a new level and civil servants will be replaced by robots, which will reduce losses and increase efficiency.